1. [REDACTED] has asked that I write to clear up the routing of memos to those of us stationed here. He prefers that we receive all correspondence directly. Actually, sending memos to him, [REDACTED] 25X1A9a causes a great deal of administrative inconvenience in that all must be rewritten or erased and changed. The rewriting slows things up and is a waste of typing energies. Erasure is obvious as well as messy. Further, the cross-indexing on either end lessens rather than increases the security. Is there any rule that requires the continuance of this procedure? This lament I have sung to all who have been here. Please arrange it so [REDACTED] and the others 25X1A9a are not troubled with our mail.

2. On cables, I can understand the propriety of their receiving messages. So on that no question is raised. But on pouched material, please break the chains that hinder and slow us.
